

Beech prevails in the sapling and pole-size stage

The last remnants of the grazing fir generation

Dense patches of beech saplings

Spruce is dominant in the southern part of the reserve

Small enclosure in the northern spruce part of the reserve with underplanted fir

Individual protection of fir

Individual protection of fir

Wool is used to protect the leader shoots of fir

The reserve is dissected by numerous small streams

Dead wood as a common part of the reserve

A forest road along the whole north-eastern part of the reserve