Partial Comments and Suggestions

This Diploma thesis is focused on assessing the potential of ICT in developing countries, specifically on Rwanda. The thesis includes a rich literature review and external analysis of developing countries. Final recommendations are based on the analysis of the current situation, as well as on the survey that aimed to illustrate the attitudes of inhabitants in developing countries. This study was done very carefully, with great interest and effort of the author.

However in the paper, there are some formal errors, such as different graphics layout (e.g. in headings, and too large font in the Table 18.). Nevertheless they do not reduce the content quality of the whole work. The work itself brings several new insights into ICT education in developing areas. Author of the thesis was fully co-operating with his supervisor and was able to work individually, too.

Total Assessment of Thesis and Final Grade Justification

The theoretical part is described transparently; the author demonstrated the ability of systematic work. Chapters are arranged in a logical sequence. The paper meets the set objective and the requirements placed on this type of work. The thesis set meets the requirements imposed on this type of work. I do recommend this thesis to defend.

Questions to Discuss:

- 1) When comparing Rwanda and the Czech Republic how long it will take to catch up with current status of the Czech Republic? What steps will be crucial?
